LEGAL INDICATORS

LEGAL INDICATORS: ISSUES AND PERSPECTIVES

The protection of the environment is conditioned by an effective application of existing environmental law at the international, regional, national and local levels. The implementation of this law requires a complex legal process involving many actors: administrations and control bodies, economic actors, legal professions, scientific experts, environmental protection associations. Yet the application of environmental law in the field is too often insufficient. How can we find out and remedy this? With the help of legal indicators.
